BROWNLOW, HAWS & CO.

Banner of freedom, by freedom unfurled!
Beacon of hope to a waiting world!
Singing above in the starry sky,
A life in the murky clouds of wrong—
Clouds that shall roll from their beams of light,
Till the whole round dome is blue and bright.

Knoxville, Tennessee, May 3, 1865.

Promotions.

STATE OF TENNESSEE, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Nashville, Tenn., April 13th.

The following named officers are announced as members of the military staff of Gov. William G. Brownlow:

Brigadier General James P. Brownlow, Adjutant General.

Brigadier General John H. James, Quartermaster General.

Brigadier General Samuel Hunt, Inspector General.

We have the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with the two first named officers only, but must say that the Governor has strong faith to lean upon if the others are as industrious, energetic, attentive, and as full of patriotic zeal.

Adjutant General Brownlow is no carpet-knight, or velvet cushion officer. He has been seasoned and disciplined in the roughest sort of field service. He has earned his star by chasing guerrillas through cedar thickets and passing them to the hands of the law. He has been around the necks of the rebels, and has been in more skirmishes and fights probably than any man of his age in the service. He is now hobbling on crutches in consequence of a dangerous and painful wound in the thigh, received months ago. He can point to his wound and say in the words of the Latin poet: "Sic itur ad astra."

"Thus we go to the stars of a General."

We congratulate our old friend Quartermaster General John H. James on his promotion. He has been stationed here for a long period as Quartermaster of the Tennessee troops, and all speak of him with praise as an upright and efficient officer. A better man and truer soldier does not breathe than General James, and we sincerely rejoice over his good fortune.

The above clip from the Nashville Times—With reference to the promotion of James P. Brownlow, we would say it was made at the unanimous request of the Legislature.

Tennessee has sorely felt the devastation and sorrow of war, but she is destined soon to regain her position as a peaceful and flourishing State. In direct antagonism to her own interests, and contrary to the long cherished convictions of her people, she was torn from the Union by the revolution that swept over her borders in 1861. Since then she has passed through an ordeal of fire and steel, and been instructed by lessons of bitter experience. She has had a new and better career. A Governor has been elected and inaugurated, and a loyal Legislature is now in session at Nashville. The rigor of military rule is being assuaged, and civil law is gradually reasserting its power in the State. The prospect thus presented is certainly gratifying to every lover of the Union.

In our columns this morning may be found the address of Wm. G. Brownlow, delivered Wednesday last upon taking his seat as the first loyal Governor of Tennessee since the war began. The address contains many truths forcibly expressed; indeed, it is a far more creditable document than we expected from the author. He assures the people that it is his settled determination to discharge the important duties of his new position with faithfulness, integrity, impartiality, and devotion to the State; and that, having been chosen Governor "without regard to old party lines," his administration will be controlled with a view to no partisan or selfish purposes. Governor Brownlow has certainly assumed most weighty responsibilities, and we hope, for the good of our sister State, that he will prove fully adequate to them. He finds around him ruins that have been made by war; we hope that he will be able to re-establish order and prosperity.

A great duty is now required of the people of Tennessee in co-operating with their Governor and Legislature. Forgetting the past, let us lay prejudice and passion aside, and earnestly cultivate peace and good will to the restoration of civil law. It is now more obvious than ever that a Southern Confederacy is an utter impossibility. The restless columns of the Union are bound to crush every element of military resistance. Tennessee is linked inseparably and forever to the Federal Government. Her people will find that government a paternal one in future, as before the war, if they but prove themselves loyal to its just authority. They can, they will, have peace and security. Let them therefore co-operate with the civil authorities of the State, and sternly array themselves against all enemies of the Union. The heart of Tennessee is true to the government, as time we feel will speedily demonstrate. We hope that the State, through Senators and Representatives in the next Congress, will fully resume its Federal relations. As the secession ordinance was null and void, so the civil authority as now established by loyal ballots should be recognized by the National Congress.—Louisville Journal.

He is Warmly Supported.

A dispatch from Washington to the editor of this paper, from a distinguished citizen of this State says:

"All is well with the President. He is warmly supported by good men from all parts of the land."

This testimony from a very accurate and experienced observer, taken in connection with the nearly all shades of opinion to President Johnson, argues well for the subject, and said as soon as the terrible chastisement of the land may induce an era of fraternal feeling; of devotion to duty, love to God and charity to man.—Nashville Times.

Striking Contrasts.

Henry Ward Beecher in Charleston, and Hangman Foote in New York jail. Charles Sumner in Richmond, and Henry A. Wise a fugitive. Andy Johnson, denounced by Jeff. Davis as a traitor, occupying the White House, and Jeff. himself running for dear life. Negro troops holding Richmond, and Lee's army on parole. Greenbacks worth seventy cents on the dollar, and Confederate currency in Richmond worth about seventy cents a bushel.

General Stoneman's Report.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF EAST TENNESSEE,
In the field, Camp at Saltville, N. C.,
April 13, via Jonesboro.

Major General Thomas:

I have the honor to report the following as the result of our operations since my last despatch from Boone, North Carolina. From Boone I became necessary to cross the Blue Ridge into the Yadkin River bottom, in order to obtain supplies for men and horses there; but we were detained three days by a fresh rain. From thence we struck for Christiansburg. On the route I detached Col. Miller, with a portion of his brigade, to Wytheville, and Major Wagner, with portion of the 16th Pennsylvania and Palmer's brigade, to Big Lick. These three points were struck almost simultaneously.

Col. Palmer attacked, and after some fighting captured Wytheville, destroying the depot of supplies at that point, also at Mair's Meadow. Major Wagner, after striking the railroad at Big Lick, pushed on towards Lynchburg, destroying on his way important bridges over the Big and Little Otter, and got to within four miles of Lynchburg, with the main body, effectually destroying the road between New River and Big Lick, and then struck for Greensboro, on the North Carolina railroad. When we arrived near Salem, N. C., I detached Palmer's brigade to destroy the bridges between Danville and Greensboro, and between Greensboro and Yadkin River, and all the large depots of supplies along the road.

This duty was performed with considerable fighting, resulting in the capture of 400 prisoners, and to my entire satisfaction.

With the other two brigades, Brown's and Miller's, and the artillery, under command of Lieut. Reagan, we pushed for Salisbury, where we found about 2,000 troops, under Maj. Gen. Wm. Gardner, and fourteen pieces of artillery, under Col. Tice and Lieut. Gen. Pemberton—the whole formed behind Grant's creek, about two miles and a half from Salisbury. As soon as proper disposition could be made, I ordered a general charge along the entire line, and the result was the capture of fourteen pieces of artillery and 1,364 prisoners, including fifty-three officers.

The following is a partial list of the public property captured north of Salisbury and destroyed by us: Four large cotton factories and 2,000 bales of cotton; four large magazines, containing 10,000 stand of arms, 1,000,000 rounds small-arm ammunition, 1,000 rounds field artillery ammunition, and 7,000 pounds powder; 35,000 bushels corn, 50,000 bushels wheat, 100,000 pounds cured bacon, 100,000 suits gray uniform clothing, 250,000 army blankets, 200,000 pounds harness leather, and 10,000 pounds salt-petre; also a very large amount of sugar, salt, rice, and other stores and medical supplies valued by the rebel Medical Director at $100,000 in gold, in addition to the arsenal at Salisbury. The military works were being fitted up, and were filled with machinery sent from Raleigh and Richmond, all of which was destroyed.

All the artillery and 1,364 prisoners are now with us. The remainder of the force was chased through and several miles beyond the town, but scattered and escaped into the woods. We remained at Salisbury two days, and then moved to the south side of the river, and then moved to this point.

From here we shall move to the south side of the Catawba, and be in position to operate against Charlotte and Columbia, or upon the flank of an army moving South.

The depots along the route traversed by our party were furnished with abundance. The number of captured arms, and the amount of stores, and the road I have no means of estimating. I can say we are much better mounted than when we left Knoxville. We have a very large surplus of small arms, and a sufficient number of the prisoners, and about a thousand contrabands, and this after crossing Stone Mountain once and the Blue Ridge three times, and a march made by headquarters, since the 20th of last month, of five hundred miles, and many more by portions of the command. The rapidity of our movements in almost every instance caused our advance guard to herald our approach, and the enemy to flee before us. Gen. Gillem, the immediate commander of the division, who is entitled to a full share of whatever is due, will make the detailed report of the expedition.

The only casualties in my staff was Captain Morrow, A. A. G., who, while gallantly assisting Major Keogh, my aid-de-camp, while leading the 11th Kentucky cavalry in the fight at Salisbury, was, on his march back, severely but not dangerously wounded in the left knee. These two young officers, as was Major Bascom, A. A. G., my chief of staff, Captain Chamberlain, my chief Quartermaster, and Captain Allen, A. A. G., I wish to bring to your especial attention, and, through you, to the General-in-Chief.

(Signed) GEO. STONEMAN, Maj. Gen.
GEO. H. THOMAS, Major General.

Deaths of English Kings and Queens.

William the Conqueror died from enormous fat, from drink, and from the violence of his passions. William Rufus died the death of the poor stage that he hunted.

Henry the First died of gluttony.

Henry the Second died of a broken heart, occasioned by the bad conduct of his children.

Richard Cœur de Lion died like the animal from which his heart was named, by an arrow from an archer.

John died, nobody knows how, but it is said of chargin, which we suppose is another term for a deer.

Henry the Third is said to have died a natural death.

Edward the First is likewise said to have died of a "natural sickness," a sickness which it would puzzle all the college of physicians to denominate.

Edward the Second was most barbarously and indecently murdered by ruffians employed by his own mother and paramour.

Edward the Third died of detage, and Richard the Second of starvation, the very reverse of George the Fourth.

Henry the Fourth is said to have died "of its caused by uneasiness," and uneasiness in palaces in those times was a very common complaint.

Henry the Fifth is said to have died of a painful affliction prematurely! This is a courtly phrase for getting rid of a king.

Henry the Sixth died in prison, by means known then only to his jailor, and known now only to Heaven.

Edward the Fifth was strangled in the tower by his uncle, Richard the Third, besides to haul off all.

Henry the Seventh wasted away as a miser ought to do, and Henry the Eighth died of caruncles, fat and fury, while Edward the Sixth died of a decline.

Queen Mary is said to have died of a "broken heart," whereas she died of a surfeit, from eating too much of black pudding.

Old Queen Bess is said to have died of melancholy, from having sacrificed Essex to his enemies—her private character not being above suspicion.

James the First died of drinking, and of the effects of a nameless vice.

Charles the First died a righteous death on the scaffold, and Charles the Second died suddenly, it is said, of apoplexy.

William the Third died from consumptive habits of body, and from the stumbling of his horse.

Queen Anne died from her attachment to "strong water," or, in other words, from drunkenness, which the physicians politely called dropsy.

George the First died of drunkenness, which his physicians as politely called an apoplectic fit.

George the Second died of a rupture of the heart, which the periodicals of that day termed a visitation of God. It is the only instance in which God ever touched his heart.

George the Third died as he had lived—a madman. Throughout life he was at least a consistent monarch.

George the Fourth died of gluttony and drunkenness.

William the Fourth died amidst the sympathies of his subjects.
